Excerpt from The English Review: May, 1919 One is struck, upon entering the spacious ground ?oor, by the charm of arrangement in the fine architectural surroundings. Beautiful antiques, chosen for their perfection of design and work manship, associate with those clean lined and simple products of modern craftsmanship. Glowing colour in cretonnes and hanging textiles; simple and pure decorations, such as painted chests and cabinets in black and white, with well-chosen colour accents; cottage furniture in honest, clean wood; rush mats with their pleasant textures and contours relieved with touches of rich dyes; check table-cloths and earthenware of form and colour in which craft traditions have been preserved in a factory age; boxes for books, boots, and hats covered in cretonnes, which harmonise with the colour scheme of the rooms; in short, all the components of a thoroughly pleasant and artistic home, be it simple as a cottage or elaborate by wealth, all informed by the taste which has become a tradition and is associated with the name of Heal. In a day of new homes this remarkable storehouse of charming and useful things will act as an inspiration to the doubtful. The intellectually aesthetic and the lover of grace and beauty alike are catered for here, and to see the well-displayed goods is an education in domestic taste. Until May 17th the present picture show will be on view, and shoppers should bear this fact in mind and pay an early visit.
