We should correct, if we can, the fault of exclusiveness, so far as it is likely to operate against a sound practical Christianity; and, perhaps, the greater misfortune of excluding any from the house of God from the fact of families engaging more room than they can regularly occupy. There are two ways of correcting the show of partiality attached to the present system of letting pews. One is, to throw them open annually to competition, so that an improvement in position may occasionally be secured by persons not advantageously accommodated another is, that the lessees of pews should annually draw lots for those they are to occupy.
