*This publication might be well worth a read, and much better than other. It really is simplified but excitement inside the 50 % of the book. You will not feel monotony at whenever you want of the time (that's what catalogues are for concerning when you check with me).

Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 396 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.8in. Excerpt from Insurance Science and Economics The modern literature of insurance in all its branches, while quite extensive and practically valuable, is largely restricted to the consideration of matters relating to the office and field administration of insurance companies. Insurance, as a branch of contract law, has a literature of its own, which, however, is quite limited in its utility to the student of insurance questions and problems of the present day. As yet, only a few really useful works have been written in English on the larger and broader aspects of insurance in its relation to public policy and the functions of government arising out of the corporate nature of insurance institutions. Obviously, the conduct of the business cannot be called entirely successful unless insurance interests are intelligently co-ordinated to an enlightened public opinion demanding economical administration on the one hand, and absolute certainty of the fulfillment of contractual obligations on the other. Insurance today is an indispensable element of social and commercial life, and it is no longer exclusively a matter of local or state concern. The marvellous growth of the business within recent years emphasizes its national, and even international, importance and the duty of government to conserve the public interests represented by it to the fullest possible extent. The questions and problems discussed in the present volume are, therefore, not only of today, but of the future, and a matter of serious concern to all who hold responsible positions with insurance companies, or who, in some capacity or another, are required to express their judgment upon public questions involving insurance considerations.
