Not illustrated. 1889 Excerpt: . . . syndicate hesitated for a moment when called upon for his proportion, nor entertained a doubt as to the ultimate results of the undertaking. To those of the present day who pass over this beautiful, diversified country of 2, 000 miles, from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, at the rate of forty miles per hour, in the elegant palace cars of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, through flourishing villages and cities, amid the golden wheat fields of Minnesota and Dakota, the rich mines, and flocks and herds upon a thousand hills in Montana and Idaho, and the magnificent forests of Washington Territory, it is impossible by any language to convey to them an idea of the innumerable trials, the almost insuperable difficulties and insurmountable obstacles which surrounded this enterprise for two or three years, even before a bar of iron was laid, not to mention those which the panic of 1873 entailed upon it. But for the advances, courage, faith and influence of these twelve men, there would have been no Northern. Pacific Railroad today. Those were the dark days of the enterprise, when it required faith and courage, when the project was ridiculed as impossible, and its advocates as crazy and visionary; and in view of the ignorance which then pervaded the whole country as to the climate, resources and practicability of this route to the Pacific, and the consequent obloquy and ridicule which was poured out upon those who had undertaken it, it is safe...
