Excerpt from Geography: Physical, Economic, Regional To prepare the youth of our land to be self-supporting, to intelligently participate in local and national affairs and to be useful and honored members of society, are among the great aims of education. The World War stimulated the reconstruction of our educational scheme, and in all parts of this country efforts are being made so to recast our courses of study that school-education may be of greater value in the affairs of life. In this work the secondary schools are being carefully studied. This is very important because comparatively few of our young people extend their school life beyond the high school. This means that the studies selected for this four-year period should be chosen because of their actual value to the average individual, rather than because they prepare a few students to enter college. That the future history of our country is to be inseparably connected with that of the rest of the world is now an assured fact. No longer can our national life be one of isolation, even if we so desired. To perform efficiently and justly our part in world and national affairs, we must know geography. It is generally conceded that geography is one of the broadest of subjects, and that it cannot, in its deeper significance, be grasped by pupils in the elementary schools. This means that geography should be taught in every secondary school, and in every institution of higher learning in the United States. The great need is for a fuller grasp of physical and economic geography and the regional geography of our own country. The report made by the National Education Committee in 1908 emphasized this, as...
