Actually, I sort of despise it, to be quite honest with you. However, that doesn't stop me from being unwittingly roped into a camping trip in the Amazon rainforest of all places, with my best friend Elizabeth and her attractive Brazilian boyfriend Carlito. By the time the first day is over I'm already exhausted, having encountered numerous dangerous creatures during my trek through the forest, and ready to hit the sack and be done with things at last. I get very little rest, however, when Elizabeth and Carlito, thinking I'm sound asleep, get a little bit amorous inside our tent, and I'm forced to witness the whole ordeal without letting on that I'm awake. By the time they're both passed out asleep, I'm in desperate need of some fresh air, and I thoughtlessly bound off into the night, getting myself lost in the middle of the jungle. Things go from worse to worst when I stumble upon a secret government facility that transforms human beings into shapeshifting animals, and I find myself chased down by the guards for my accidental breach of their security. And finally, things get really interesting when a heroic bearshifter gets thrown into the mix, but will his selfless efforts be enough?.
