Behold a continent transformed from the rough and rugged outlines bequeathed to it by nature to the finished product of a twentieth century civilization. Let all the struggles and trying vicissitudes of the pioneer in a wilderness, overrun with wild beasts, inhabited by cunning savages, dotted over with dens, traversed by paths, now the silent witnesses of a transition to a land verdant with fruit and flowers, fragrant and sacred beneath the shadows of numberless homes and hallowed by a citizenship whose fruition is resplendent with progress and freedom, answer. The patriotic and righteous impulses of the present age stripped of the example and salutary influence of the giants of earlier days who still live in immortal deeds would become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.
