Excerpt: . cutter belonging to Falmouth, and their business was boarding homeward-bound ships to supply clothes to those who preferred walking ashore in a new suit to being seen in sea-stained garments. In fact, their business was to steal a march upon advertising Moses and Son, in which I hope they were entirely successful, for a more civil set of men I never chanced to meet. With great regret I heard of the death of the Captain in a gale on the 22nd August last: a day referred to in the log of the Orion. They were at anchor in Coverack Cove, when the wind setting in furiously from the SB. compelled them to run for Falmouth. Off the Manacles a sea broke on board, and swept the Captain from the helm. At the time this occurred, which was early in the morning, we were...
