Free market capitalism is a fair weather economic system. It works well when demographics are favorable, when debt levels are low or at least manageable, and when capital is home rooted; that is, when families savings arent being lent to create low-paying jobs in other countries. The success of modern democratic capitalism during the 1950s through the 1970s was a temporary phenomenon resulting from an unusual convergence of favorable events. These favorable factors and the prosperity that resulted from them arent coming back, and the systems strong bias toward the wealthy is becoming more and more obvious. Today global capitalism is on the road to failure . . . at least for the 80 or more of the worlds population that is poor in wealth and real estate. The invisible hand of the free market is in the process of devouring them by providing even fewer and lower paying jobs! The free market doesnt care about either fairness or standards of living; it cares only about efficiency and the lowest possible cost. Hence the middle class in developed countries is quietly slipping...
