Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. Excerpt from The Place of University Extension When a new movement in education knocks at our door and demands recognition as an educational agency, it is natural and right that its adherents should justify its claims. Too often a seemingly new movement proves to be only a variety of some old agency dressed in a new garb, or what is worse, a subordinate element in education, pushed forward into a prominence which its intrinsic merits do not deserve. The new education has been heralded numberless times; in fact, it is always with us, and yet the predicted revolution has not come, and we are still following the traditional lines of education with such slight exceptions, that it would be difficult to enumerate any clearly defined principle which our age has brought forth. It is easy to see many changes in the educational world. The interest in education has greatly increased; the public are much more willing to support educational projects, both by taxation and by private gifts; the public schools have become a powerful means of elevating all classes of society; technical and secondary schools are abundant and efficient; and the great universities. State and private, have acquired an influence, which such institutions never before exercised. While recognizing these improvements, and many more that could be named I stall affirm that our age has not been original in its methods and that it has not departed widely from the educational traditions of the past. We have, to be sure, in a groping, unconscious way made many important modifications in our educational system, but the principles upon which they rest have not been enumerated, nor have they been justified upon grounds in...
