TYNE AFTER TYNE: AN ENVIRONMENTAL HISTORY OF A RIVER S BATTLE FOR PROTECTION, 1529-2015 (HARDBACK)

White Horse Press, United Kingdom, 2017. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Over the last five centuries, North-East England s River Tyne went largely with the flow as it rode with us on a rollercoaster from technologically limited early modern oligarchy, to large-scale Victorian improvement , to twentieth-century deoxygenation and to twenty-first-century efforts to expand the river s biodiversity. By studying five centuries of Tyne conservatorship, we can see that 1855 to 1972 was a blip on the graph of environmental concern, preceded and followed by more sustainable engagement and a fairer negotiation with the river s forces and expressions as a whole and natural system, albeit driven by different motivations. Even during this blip, however, many people expressed environmental concern. Several organisations, including the Tyne Salmon Conservancy (1866-1950), local governors, the Tyne s anglers and the Standing Committee on River Pollution s Tyne Sub-Committee (1921-1939), tried to protect the river s environmental health from harm, as they perceived it. This Tyne study offers a template for a future body of work on British rivers that shakes off the straitjacket of the Thames as the river of choice in British environmental history. And it undermines traditional socio-cultural approaches which reduce rivers to passive backdrops of human activities. Departing from progressive narratives that equated change with improvement, and declensionist narratives that equated change with loss and destruction, it moves away from morally loaded notions of better or worse, and even dead, rivers. This book refocuses on the production of new and different rivers and fully situates the Tyne s fluvial transformations within their political, economic, cultural, social and intellectual contexts. Let us sit with the Tyne itself, some of its salmon, a seventeenth-century Tyne River Court Juror, some nineteenth-century Tyne Improvement Commissioners, a...
