Not illustrated. 1852 Excerpt: . the last, so intimately connected with the science of medicine, two gentlemen not of our profession have the distinction of being the first to collect facts bearing on our climate. Near the close of the last century, Governor Saegent made observations, but they were never systematized and published; and it was not till 1806 that the thermometer was observed, and its indications regularly recorded. This was then commenced by Col. Jaeeed Mansfield, Surveyor General of the North-western Territory, and afterwards a distinguished Professor at West Point. The biographical notices of our early physicians is now concluded, and their names, I trust, will forever remain in the archives of our Association, as the first fruits of its organization--the first chapter of our medical history. In early times Cincinnati was not without her empirics, whose names need not be recorded; but the empiricism of that period, here...
