Enitharmon Press, United Kingdom, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. Poet Nell Regan explores heart and landscape in this century and the last, from Santa Fe to Celbridge, from Cork to the banks of the Mississippi, and from Paris to San Francisco. The book opens in urban and rural landscapes in contemporary Ireland and further afield, building to the sequence Thirty-Six Views of the Sugarloaf, prompted by Hokusai's Fuji woodcuts and capturing transitory moments occurring around and on this iconic Wicklow mountain. At the center of the book is Passage, the story of the migration of an early 20th-century Irish woman to the United States. From the Federal Gold Reserve to a shell factory in Iowa, tragic conflicts of work, love, and fate take place. The final section is formed by a series of love poems which celebrate and chart the early months of a new relationship and turn on possible, imagined futures. Throughout the collection, changes in the material properties of glass, stone, tree, and rain parallel transformations in the human body through illness, vocation, and fertility, as geographic and emotional territories find points of contact and exchange.
