She was born in Springfield, Burlington County, N. J. , in 1811, and was married to John M. Lamb in 1881, and in 1885, with her husband and family, moved to Michigan, landing at Detroit. In 1836 the family, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Lamb and three small children, moved into the old log house half a mile east of the now village of Dryden--then a wilderness with a winding woods road leading to the southeast, known as the messenger road. Here the many cares pertaining to the pioneer household were calmly met and expeditiously overcome. A farm was hewn out of the dense forest and made to yield an abundance, in which the industrious hands of a mother nobly assisted. During her residence in this township she has seen the forests disappear and hundreds of happy homes brought forth that now dot our beautiful country. The winding trails have disappeared, save here and there they may be traced through groves of timber, and the broad highways have taken their place. The pioneers log house has been replaced by others more commodious, ornamental and convenient. Villages have sprung up and many of them have grown into cities; railroads have traversed our country and spanned the continent; her life was lived in a progressive age. Wars have visited our country, slaves have been made freemen, and on several occasions the runaway was cared for and comforted by the hands that are now...
