Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . This book takes you inside the mind of one who suffers. A bullied child, a child caught up in the violence of a war-torn nation, an abused spouse, a homeless person, a person who suffers mental illness, a person with a drug or alcohol dependency, a victim of racism, an immigrant or refugee fleeing their homeland, desperate for survival, desperate to find a safe haven for the children, even a soldier who survived the battle only to live a life of nightmares. See what they see. Hear what they hear. Feel their emotions rise and fall in extreme waves of confusion and sadness. Fear what they fear. Empathy helps us better understand what others are going through, and often encourages a person to get involved in some small way to help another person in need. As a political activist, I was frustrated every time I read judgmental, even hateful comments on social media about a homeless person, an immigrant or refugee, a person struggling with an addiction or mental illness, and others in need. On social media news pages, there is no person off limits to negative criticism. While some people are accepting and welcoming to refugees and immigrants, others shout, Go Away! Even a news story about a woman abused or a military veteran who suffers Post Traumatic Stress Disorder results in cold-hearted comments like, Get over it. I thought to myself, How can I help them understand that the person they rage against is suffering tremendously? How can I help them understand that, for many homeless people, it isn't as simple as Get a job! How can I help them understand that a person with a drug addiction...
