

Lost at Sea, Sort of (Paperback)

By John Taylor Mulder

AUTHORHOUSE, United States, 2013. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .This book is about choices, focus, survival and how our American based cultural belief systems sometimes shortcut our decision making processes. We all have belief systems. They are neither good nor bad. It is the additional information we choose to either include or not include in our decisions that determine the outcome. Our belief system is not limited to religious or spiritual aspects, but include every decision we make about every task we do on a daily basis. What foods we eat, what we watch, read, listen, our friends, our employers; it is an endless list. Without additional information, everything we believe in will produce an expected, less desirable outcome. With additional information, we will make better decisions with a more predictable, desirable outcome. In this book I share some of my experiences and how I struggled to understand the importance of how to effectively use information. For me, it is the person Jack Mulder that goes overboard at night in the Pacific Ocean and transforms into the person, Captain Jack. Just a moment passes from the time I leave the sailboat until...
