Excerpt from Half Round the World, or Among the Uncivilized The intelligent commander Of the steamer is not only an accomplished seaman and navigator, but he is an educator, with very reasonable and sensible views on the subject. He is practical as well as scientific; and in Burma, the Malay Peninsula, the island of Sumatra, and elsewhere, the various spices are explained while the audience are looking at the trees or plants which produce them. They visit a nutmeg plantation; and some of them who had used nutmegs and mace all their lives learned more about: these spices than they had ever known before.
