Not illustrated. 1901 Excerpt: .into a space once occupied by a let-down bed in a colonial homestead. It has become almost too much a fashion to litter a room with bric-a-brac. Somehow the cherished objects, each with a special value of association, attain an added dignity when collected behind glass doors, in calm seclusion from dust, dirt and general contamination. One mother found that she could have much better chance for ventilation in the little back room by moving the bed to the other side of the room. But the closet door could not then be opened, so she bought a cheap denim curtain and asked a furniture dealer the best way to put it up. He told her of the convenient brass rod and sockets which any woman can put up for herself just inside the frame of her door, and the second picture shows how the curtain was hung. In another house, a window was backed when the addition was built on, and the contriving housewife utilized the space left for a book closet. Below it were placed a couch with attractive cover and cushions and a piano lamp, thus making a very alluring cozy corner. One of the most fascinating of little homes has the cutest closet! Once there was no way to reach the sitting room from the parlor except to go around through the hall. There was a closet between and a chimney. If there had been a single partition it would have been a...
