OCLC Number: 53067197 Excerpt: . . . 4 she has provided on other issues, including SARS, in the State of Minnesota. In the end, in every area such as long-term care, medical practice, and product development, we need to and can do better, and the tools for doing so are already at hand. The health care industry can and must undergo the same type of transformation toward a culture of quality and system for continuous improvement that the manufacturing sector has recently experienced. Our experts are here today to tell us that this is being done, and with our help, it can be done faster. The prepared statement of Senator Coleman follows: PREPARED OPENING STATEMENT OF SENATOR COLEMAN Good morning and welcome to today's hearing. In the 19th Century, Edward Jenner's discovery pushed the boundaries of germ theory and disease. The use of antiseptics and anesthesia in surgery increased public health levels and sanitation. And, in the end, the simple act of washing one's hands transformed modern medicine by saving lives by preventing the spread of disease. The topic today deals with how we can reduce errors that negatively impact patient safety. It is not just a discussion about systems - in fact, it's a basic discussion about how do human beings interact with the systems that are created to underscore the primary obligation of medicine. To protect the safety of patients. That is, in my mind, the premise of our discussion today, and the testimony of our witnesses. To be sure, there must be strong, dynamic and rigorous systems in place to ensure the safety of a patient from the moment they enter our Nation's hospitals - to the time they leave. There is an...
