Excerpt from Nephritis of the Newly Born: An Address Delivered Before the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, November 28, 1895 Which are these favorable circumstances? Both phosphates and carbonates of calcium are known to be deposited from the blood whenever circulation is retarded or impeded; for instance, in the older baby in the latter stages of epiphyseal rickets. In the newly born the circulation is retarded or impeded by congenital (or rapidly acquired) heart disease, by general debility, or by asphyxia. As early as 1883 (Vireh. Arch.) Litten counted among such favorable conditions a coagulation necrosis occasioned by the interruption of circulation. Thus these forms of retarded circulation, to which I alluded before in a different connection, exert a baneful influence from a chemical point of view.
