Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. Excerpt from The Music and Song of the Ages At first, so difficult was it to abandon the Latin, we find a number of hymns, half Latin and half German. Congregational singing was again revived. The ancient Ambrosian psalmody, in a purer and richer form, was given to the people. The choir of priests was dissolved. Instead of solo monotonous singing in uniform loud notes of equal value, a copious rhythm with lively modulations was substituted, and about the close of the fifteenth century, singing in parts, took the place of singing in unison. The air was sung by the congregation, and the singers in the choir accompanied the congregation in the several parts. The air, however, was set in tenor, which was the leading part of music. The tunes were obtained by modifying old tunes, by appropriating national airs of the middle ages, and using, without reserve, the rich treasure of song-tunes in popular use. Many of the hymns were parodies of secular songs, the love songs of the minne-singers. Thus, the popular ditty, sung by wandering apprentices, which commenced: Inspruch, I must leave thee, and go my lonely way, far hence, to foreign lands, was transformed into O world, I must leave thee, and go my lonely way, unto my Father's Home. When Luther composed his melodies, the people were taught them by traveling musicians, singing processions of school boys and city cornet-teers. The Papal Church sought to prevent the singing. But, wherever the spirit of the Reformation went, there flowed the torrent of song. The demand for hymns and music was sudden, and the result of no visible design. It almost preceded...
