Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from The Furrier s Friend Adviser on Dressing and Tanning of Fur Skins and Hides Skinning an Animal All small animals open across the hind legs; open the tail, loosen the skin from the legs, cut the paws of the bone but leave it on the skin. Take out the bone of the tail by catching hold of the point of the bone and pulling it out, not the other way, it might tear. Then pull the skin over the body and head leaving the front paws on also ears, eyes and lips and nose. Do not damage any of them; they may be needed. Then pull it over a board according to the shape of the animal. With skins with broad legs such as Foxes just stick some newspaper over the flesh also tail to dry quicker. To prevent the loosening of the hair, turn ears outside the board. Large skins are best opened on the Belly also on front legs; dry in a shed but hang high out of reach of mice, rats and other thieves. Dry skins can be protected against moth or worms, by putting them into a tight box with Napthalene. Hides can either be dried or covered on the flesh side with salt. Put sides, legs and head inside and role up. Tanning Hides Preparatory to tanning the hides are to be soaked in clean, cold water. When they are green only a few hours to get the dirt and salt cut. When dry for 2 or 3 days until thoroughly soaked but water must be changed every day principally in summer. After 12 hours soak flesh all can be...
